THE BRITISH v. THE GENUINE (?) ARTICLE.

In the ruling spheres of Britain's business world the question of the employment of aliens of all types, creeds and colors has long been a theme for the expression of regret and bitter expostulation with those, at least, who have the best interests of the nation at heart. Schemes have been formulated and efforts have been made in many quarters to stem the flooding of London and other of Britain's commercial centres by German and kindred foreign clerks, who are but one degree removed from pauperdom. But the result unfortunately has not been satisfactory. Thousands of competent and highly educated British clerks are to-day starving in England owing to the simple fact that the services of foreigners can be secured at a third of the cost which the very nature of a Britain's existence renders necessary. The theory that it is always wise to buy in the cheapest market has often been exploded, and we take it that the day is not far distant when the followers of that policy in this particular direction will suffer a rude awakening. However, the point which concerns us most at present is whether or not the time has arrived when the services of the aliens now filling positions of trust, under the Hongkong Government should be dispensed with? And in framing this query as delicately as we have done, we are but faintly echoing the sentiments of the public—or rather the only section of it worthy of regard and consideration. Many members of the Portuguese community are respectable and honorable citizens, but the point whether they or born Britishers have the first claim to billets at the disposal of the Government of Hongkong is one that bears little argument. And if after the examples of Portuguese honesty and trustworthiness that it has had in the cases of Barradas and Alves, the Government still retains, and advances in its service, men recruited from the same questionable source—then it will be clothed in more odium than at present surrounds it.

Happily under British law all men are equal, but it is contrary to the spirit of even the elastic sentiments of British freedom and fair-play that the interests of foreigners should be furthered at the expense of our own nationals. And in no department where absolute honesty, secrecy and ability are required should there be any other than Englishmen engaged. The public has had a surfeit of the cheap (?) article and now demands a better.

THE HOME RULE BILL.

Mr. Gladstone, in reply to a question, declined to say whether he considered the retention or exclusion of Irish Members of vital importance to the bill. Mr. Sexton expressed his approval of the principle of the bill, but as the land question, appointment of judges, and the control of the police are reserved, he urged the retention of the full strength of the Irish Members in the House of Commons for six years. He opposed the financial proposals as less favourable than those contained in the bill of 1886 and appealed to Mr. Gladstone to reconsider the position.

THAT section of the Praya Reclamation opposite the Cricket Ground and the eastern end of the Praya Central is now all but completed. There has been a vast amount of interesting work done on this portion, a full description of which will appear in these columns shortly.

AMELIA was all sweet, nice and nervous and she said to her sweetheart:
"You have been so long a friend I want to tell you something. I am—she blushed—"I am going to be married."

"Wait," he cried, "before you go further, hear me. I must say it, though I have no right now, but I will have less right later. I love you; I adore you; I have loved you since we were children together. I do not see how I can live and see you the wife of another. But at least you will know that I have loved you all these years, and when you hear the wind sigh over my distant grave—of course, that is nonsense."

"Don't take on so, John Henry," she said, sofly. "I'm going to marry you!"
Then the strong man faded, and, as she bent over him a determined little line showed about her mouth, and she muttered, "I had to do something to bring him to it."

It is stated the greatest number of people ever killed by an earthquake since the dawn of history was 100,000. The date of the terrible disaster was 1703, and the scene of the most violent disturbance was at Yeddo, the capital of Japan, and its vicinity.

THE Canadian Pacific Railway Co.'s royal mail steamer Empress of India, Captain O. P. Marshall, R.N., from Vancouver, arrived at Shanghai at 3.30 p.m. to-day, and left again at 4 p.m. for this port, where she may be expected to arrive about 7 a.m. on Tuesday next.

AN upright Judge needn't be ashamed of his sentences even in the presence of the strictest grammarians. Very true! but we have had at least one Judge in Hongkong whose upright sentences, where personal prejudices were involved, were on a par with their grammatical inaccuracies. Those who run may read.

THE Masterful inquiry into the fire at No. 8, Jervis Street on the 13th inst. was opened by Mr. H. E. Woodhouse on the 18th inst. and adjourned until the 24th inst. The proceedings were taken at the instance of Messrs. Reuter, Brockmann & Co., agents for the Fire Insurance Co. of Hamburg, issuers of a policy for $4,000 on the premises. Hitherto nothing suspicious has been revealed in the evidence.

FRENCH War Office experts are divided in opinion concerning the value or danger of the Eiffel Tower in case of a siege of Paris. German staff officers have written quite freely about the matter, principally holding that the tower would afford a fine target. Some French officers agree with this view; others say the tower would be a fine target for the tower out of range, while it would afford an excellent post for observation. From it the operations of an enemy could be observed for a radius of forty-four miles.

On the arrival of the steamer Hughak at Singapore, from Swatow, on the 14th inst. the master reported that twenty-one of his Chinese passengers were suffering from injuries of a more or less serious nature. Upon investigation it was found that on the previous day, at noon the passengers attempted to steal some water from a sailor, and he "in self defence" threw a quantity of carbolic acid over them. The Strait Times states that the injured man was admitted to the hospital, while the sailor left in the ship the same day for Batavia.

THE Nashville American, a Democratic paper, eulogizes the late President in the following terms:—Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States for four years, in Saturday a private citizen. He came from the ranks and attained the zenith. He was a good citizen. He adorned the private walks, became a good soldier, successfully entered the arena of politics and achieved the loftiest pinnacle. He was President of the Republic and won all the honors to which his faith was entitled. Coming of the most illustrious ancestry known to our generation, he more than sustained his progenitors. He was an honest man, a man and preeminently the representative of his party.

THE sedan chair is named after Sedan, the town where it was first used. The earliest mention of it in England occurs in 1518. Early in the following century the Duke of Buckingham caused much indignation by its use in London. People were exasperated at this nobleman employing his fellow-men to take the place of horses to carry him. Prince Charles brought from Spain, in 1623, three curiously wrought sedans, two of which he gave to the Duke of Buckingham. A few weeks after their introduction, Manners produced his play "The Bondman," and in it he thus adverts to the ladies:—

"For their pomp and care being borne
In triumph on men's shoulders.
The reference is doubtless to Buckingham's sedan, which was borne like a palanquin.

THE following clever bit of criticism is from the New York Star:—"We have in 'Admiral, or the Japanese Wife,' a four-act play by Sir Edwin Arnold. It is flowing, majestic and wordy, in Sir Edwin's own style. It is swift and nimble as a cat, and thirty shakhs long. It flashes like a new Admiral, as anybody might think it would, Sir Edwin having found of the muse or the muse, we are not sure which. It is gratifying always when the shakhs are pushed back, we may behold Sir Edwin at intellectual play. Chrysos kowararu infu to be is a bore, like the light shooting through the mad. He is great, he sounds like silver but he brings down the yashiki. We up the shakhs to him. There are a great many Japanese words and phrases in his play, we suspect a good many readers would give a peck of rice to know what the italics are all about. But as, say, What are you?"

It is said that the last fatal duel fought between British officers was in July, 1853, between Captain Nolan, riding-master of the 15th King's Hussars, and Captain Johnson, R.E.I.C., near Bangalore, Madras. The duel was fought with swords, and Captain Nolan killed his adversary. This Captain Nolan killed the same officer who carried the order to Lord Cardigan to take the guns from the Russians on Balaklava. Nolan was shot dead in the charge of the Light Brigade. It was of him that that immortal Adam Lindsay Gordon wrote:—
So he rode to death with that careless smile
In the van of the Light Brigade,
So, stricken by Russian grape, the cheer
Rang out while he topped back
From his shattered horse as merry and clear
As it did when he rode the pack.
Let never a tear his memory stain, give his ashes
A new and dignified resting place.
One of many who perished, and not in vain,
As a type of our chivalry.

SIR John Thompson, the Canadian Premier, who lately started for Paris in connection with his duties as a Behring Sea case arbitrator, is not yet fifty years old, and it is but sixteen years ago that he was elected to the Nova Scotia Legislature, whose proceedings he had previously followed as a reporter.

At the Magistrate's to-day, before Mr. H. E. Woodhouse, the police prosecuted a Chinaman for making a noise at his house in a Wellington Street in the small hours of this morning. Half an hour after midnight, while enjoying the game of chai-mut, Defendant was fined $2. Now we want to see these energetic policemen start on the German Club, from which only too often emanate hideous din up to two and three o'clock in the morning.

THINGS TO EAT.

Ice was unknown before the Seventeenth century.
In 1500 the French made five kinds of wheat bread.
In 1513 the price of an ox was $12; if corn-fed $18.
Bread was first made in England with yeast in 1534.
In 1513 a lamb was worth 5s; two dozen eggs, 3d.
Salmon was formerly believed to promote drunkenness.
Pork was the most highly esteemed flesh at a Roman table.
In Iceland, codfish beaten to a powder is used as bread.
The peacock and swan were famous old German delicacies.

THE instances of genius in old age are more numerous than may generally be believed. The painter Titian was in his hundredth year when he died, and a number of his greatest works were completed in the latter years of his life. In the great gallery of Venice was finished when he was ninety-nine years old. Sir Isaac Newton retained his intellectual powers to within a short time of his death, at eighty-five. Michael Angelo was still actively at work when his last illness occurred at eighty-nine. Alexander von Humboldt, probably the greatest of modern scientists, was eighty-nine when he died. His greatest work, "Cosmos," was the labour of the last fourteen or fifteen years of his life, although the germ of it was published fifty years before in his "Ansichten der Natur" (Views of Nature). Mr. Gladstone, Lord Tennyson and other prominent modern examples could be quoted.

To a correspondent who wanted to know how many of Napoleon the First's Field Marshals died in their beds, the editor of the New York Collector replied:—

Exactly how many of the Marshals of the Empire died in their beds, I cannot say; but I can inform you that out of the twenty-three ten died violent deaths:—

Kannes, Duc de Montebello, was killed at the battle of Estling, May 22, 1809.
Bessières, Duc d'Elle, was killed before Lutzen, May 2, 1818.
Duroc, Duc de Frioul, was killed at Reichenbach, May 22, 1813.
Posadowski was drowned crossing the Elster, October 15, 1813.
Junot, Duc d'Abrantes, leaped from a window while insane on July 25, 1815.
Berthier, Prince de Neuchâtel and of Wagram, was assassinated at Bamberg, by masked men, on June 1, 1815.
Mouton, Prince and Grand Duc de Berg, and ex-King of Naples, was shot at Prizmo (Calabria), October 13, 1815.
Ney, Duc d'Elchingen, Prince de la Moskowa, was shot at Paris by order of Louis XVIII, the 7th of December, 1815.
Bruno was massacred by a mob at Lyons in 1815.
Mortier, Duc de Trévise, was killed by the internal machine of Fieschi, by the side of Louis-Philippe, on July 28, 1835.

THE "JOB LOTS" EXHIBITION.

The Ancient and Honourable Order of Job Lots of Hongkong is going ahead in most surprising and successful manner. It proposes to hold a convivial on Thursday next, which will probably—or at least so they may hope—form the first of an annual series. The happy idea has also occurred to the moving spirits that as the Hongkong exhibits for the Imperial Institute are now being got together, it would most certainly be a trouble of arranging, to let us see ourselves as others see us, or at least see the representative collection of exhibits as the Imperial Institute will show them to the world. The original idea is distinctly good, but needed slight improvement, and has been improved: for, as Hongkong's consignment to the Institute would by itself be nothing very sensational, other attractions from private sources have been added, and the whole promises to be an exceedingly fine array. Besides this, a programme of musical and other items will conduce to the enjoyment of this gathering, though we have as yet heard nothing as to refreshments, which are absolutely essential, and which were so badly missed at the inaugural meeting of the "Odd Volumes" as to very seriously (for a time only, we hope) the prospects of the new association. At the present case, if the lesson has been learned, there is no reason at all why the "Odd Volumes" convivial should not be a success of such magnitude as to warrant its perpetuation among the greatest of annual reunions in this not too united Colony. Indeed, why should not this Colony keep abreast of civilized society and have a yearly exposition of its industrial products? Perhaps we have not enough to make a great show standing alone, but as an accessory to a flourishing annual function it certainly could and should be done.

THE IRISH GLOBE-TROTTER.

Having left Ould Ireland and travelled so far east that every step I now take brings me nearer home again, it is only decent of me to write down my experiences for publication, that being the custom with all globe-trotters. Having spent more than twenty-four hours in Hongkong it is a power of learning I have to give the social conditions of them by the Chinese, which will date back from the year one to the present time.

Foreigners (as Europeans, and other non-African races call themselves here) have no large share of my attention, thereby making my history of Hongkong complete, and if you will just have the complaisance to put in my commas, colons, and semi-colons, in their right places, this discourse will knock into smithereens all other accounts published.
But, for the love of heaven, take care of them steps, for it's a terrible sure they are in literature what the peace are in commerce, and if you take care of them that I speak of, the periods, like the pounds, will take care of themselves.
It is not for me to write of my voyage by air; things were square with me this and I made no mental notes, also to be sure there were many ups and downs in that portion of my life, and the hazy of some countries we passed through might make one believe himself in another world than this. But no matter for that, we have got to Hongkong and a mighty glad place it is entirely, what between the pigs grunting in the Irish fashion at West Point, and a sixteen countryman of my own kicking up ructions in the Council room, calling yer all bad names, and describing Hongkong as worse than purgatory, begorra that same and a few other trifles such as a want of money, and the discontent of the people with the Government, and the quarrels, make Hongkong quite home-like and the pride of me heart.
Perhaps you'll be after asking me if it's Mr. O'Brien I mean that is kicking up ructions? Well, then sure and may be it is, and may be it isn't, for the O'Briens, like the Murphys, are as thick as black-berry bushes in Ould Ireland, and jest as indigenous to the soil.
It's true enough for you Mr. Shakespeare—"All the world's a stage and all the people actors."
And this portion of the theatre of life, this atom of the world's drama, is one of its most stagey parts, and acting is very general here.
The low comedy of one public servant, a "rich and rare" for its audacity is now off the boards and there is but the far-end of his song left—"Why did I kick me downstairs," and the answer is easy any-way.
Then upon the same stage, and with the same scene, Hongkong's principal actor, following the melodramatic performance, took him steps all soldiers must learn before they become generals, when he advised the employment of foreigners in the Public Service, to the exclusion of British. Now when he made that speech he must have had an impression that none in the colony could say boo to a goose.
Bedad the very core of me heart warms into honest indignation to see how the business of each Government department in this colony is trifled with, and made a shambles of, to say with one spalden to another, Arrah, begorra! man alive, that same quare idiosyncrasy of the Saxon to patronize foreigners is very powerful. Ye have in this very same colony a German for the Observatory, enjoying the very comfortable position of Clerk of the Weather; another Government bargain is another German who enjoys the sinecure billet of Inspector of Schools, and no doubt he does a power of good teaching ye all to spake decent English with a beautiful accent. Some heartless crachures might say they are a sign-post pointing to Government jobs, but sure it's the same with the Saxon all the world over. In me own country, God bless it when I was a bit of a gossoon it's well I remember going to see the play in Dublin. It was a rare swell theatre patronized by the Sassenachs of that illustrious city, and where ladies and gentlemen in bare feet were not admitted. The crush was that great, and the squeezing so tight that my stomach has never grown anything since then, and its capacity for potatoes is small, although I stand aligh upon six feet, but no matter for that, the scrimmage was to see the Donna (as she was called) dance like a dry horse on a foxy road, when to me own mind Biddy Flanagan was the crame of them all. Bedad the colleen banded her feet so well that it was like a vision from Fairyland, figuring with exquisite grace before an earthly audience. Hurroo!
But sure, to them crachures she was only Biddy, and now it's a fact I am relating to you when that colleen married a Frenchman and went by the name of Mademoiselle what-ye-call-it she came out on the London boards and secured typhoons of applause, and a fortune!
"The devil thank them," said she, "for it's not me that gits it at all, at all, but my French name."
Well, jest another illustration if you please, before I let down the curtain on this portion of me discourse. Now quare as the following may seem, I pledge you may word it's the truth I state a tellin' ye of, upon the honour of an Irish gentleman:—
In the same illustrious city of Dublin there is one of them quare crachures that makes his living by making faces, but as he is an Irishman and an Irish name it was a mighty poor one he had until he took the foreign name of Monsieur Laughyouett, and then there was a regular rush upon his establishment and a sergeant of police had to be placed on duty at the door to keep the footway clear.
The Lord Lieutenant hearing of the Frenchman said to his mistress—
"Begorra! I will have our pictures took by the Frenchman."
"I have not the taste dejection," said she.
"We'll be ready by one o'clock," said he.
"No," said she, "the bacon and cabbage is served at that hour and the cabbage has come all the way from Covent Garden, for if there is anything I can't abide it's thim Irish cabbage—it tastes so vulgar."
So after a little palaver and a good deal of the bacon and cabbage, they went to Westmoreland Street, and forinist Laughyouett's door there was a power of people—all the quality of the city trying to get in, and when the Lord Lieutenant and his Missis got to the door the Sergeant stopped them—"Where are you shoving to?" said he.
"Why," said the Lord Lieutenant, "we are come to be took."
"It's mighty soon you'll be that same," said the sergeant, "if you brake the pace by obstructing the highway."
"Why," said he, "don't you know who you are—a talking to? I am the Lord Lieutenant."
"The sornow, a bit of me cares who you are," said the sergeant, "if I have my orders from a better man yes, and I know my duty."
"A better than me?" said the Lord Lieutenant, "and who may that be?"
"Why, Monsieur Laughyouett to be sure, you consander," said the sergeant.
Now if the Lieutenant but knew that Monsieur Laughyouett was only an Irishman he and his Missis would not have been there; nor the sergeant; nor the crowd. And he and his Missis would have been worried out of their lives if they had known that the cabbage and bacon had been exported to the London markets from Ireland. Such is the power of a foreign name to the Saxon.

many ups and downs in that portion of my life, and the hazy of some countries we passed through might make one believe himself in another world than this. But no matter for that, we have got to Hongkong and a mighty glad place it is entirely, what between the pigs grunting in the Irish fashion at West Point, and a sixteen countryman of my own kicking up ructions in the Council room, calling yer all bad names, and describing Hongkong as worse than purgatory, begorra that same and a few other trifles such as a want of money, and the discontent of the people with the Government, and the quarrels, make Hongkong quite home-like and the pride of me heart.

"A better than me?" said the Lord Lieutenant, "and who may that be?"
"Why, Monsieur Laughyouett to be sure, you consander," said the sergeant.

Bedad the very core of me heart warms into honest indignation to see how the business of each Government department in this colony is trifled with, and made a shambles of, to say with one spalden to another, Arrah, begorra! man alive, that same quare idiosyncrasy of the Saxon to patronize foreigners is very powerful. Ye have in this very same colony a German for the Observatory, enjoying the very comfortable position of Clerk of the Weather; another Government bargain is another German who enjoys the sinecure billet of Inspector of Schools, and no doubt he does a power of good teaching ye all to spake decent English with a beautiful accent. Some heartless crachures might say they are a sign-post pointing to Government jobs, but sure it's the same with the Saxon all the world over. In me own country, God bless it when I was a bit of a gossoon it's well I remember going to see the play in Dublin. It was a rare swell theatre patronized by the Sassenachs of that illustrious city, and where ladies and gentlemen in bare feet were not admitted. The crush was that great, and the squeezing so tight that my stomach has never grown anything since then, and its capacity for potatoes is small, although I stand aligh upon six feet, but no matter for that, the scrimmage was to see the Donna (as she was called) dance like a dry horse on a foxy road, when to me own mind Biddy Flanagan was the crame of them all. Bedad the colleen banded her feet so well that it was like a vision from Fairyland, figuring with exquisite grace before an earthly audience. Hurroo!

But sure, to them crachures she was only Biddy, and now it's a fact I am relating to you when that colleen married a Frenchman and went by the name of Mademoiselle what-ye-call-it she came out on the London boards and secured typhoons of applause, and a fortune!
"The devil thank them," said she, "for it's not me that gits it at all, at all, but my French name."
Well, jest another illustration if you please, before I let down the curtain on this portion of me discourse. Now quare as the following may seem, I pledge you may word it's the truth I state a tellin' ye of, upon the honour of an Irish gentleman:—
In the same illustrious city of Dublin there is one of them quare crachures that makes his living by making faces, but as he is an Irishman and an Irish name it was a mighty poor one he had until he took the foreign name of Monsieur Laughyouett, and then there was a regular rush upon his establishment and a sergeant of police had to be placed on duty at the door to keep the footway clear.
The Lord Lieutenant hearing of the Frenchman said to his mistress—
"Begorra! I will have our pictures took by the Frenchman."
"I have not the taste dejection," said she.
"We'll be ready by one o'clock," said he.
"No," said she, "the bacon and cabbage is served at that hour and the cabbage has come all the way from Covent Garden, for if there is anything I can't abide it's thim Irish cabbage—it tastes so vulgar."
So after a little palaver and a good deal of the bacon and cabbage, they went to Westmoreland Street, and forinist Laughyouett's door there was a power of people—all the quality of the city trying to get in, and when the Lord Lieutenant and his Missis got to the door the Sergeant stopped them—"Where are you shoving to?" said he.
"Why," said the Lord Lieutenant, "we are come to be took."
"It's mighty soon you'll be that same," said the sergeant, "if you brake the pace by obstructing the highway."
"Why," said he, "don't you know who you are—a talking to? I am the Lord Lieutenant."
"The sornow, a bit of me cares who you are," said the sergeant, "if I have my orders from a better man yes, and I know my duty."
"A better than me?" said the Lord Lieutenant, "and who may that be?"
"Why, Monsieur Laughyouett to be sure, you consander," said the sergeant.

Bedad the very core of me heart warms into honest indignation to see how the business of each Government department in this colony is trifled with, and made a shambles of, to say with one spalden to another, Arrah, begorra! man alive, that same quare idiosyncrasy of the Saxon to patronize foreigners is very powerful. Ex-Queen Isabella of Spain has written to the Pope, petitioning him to canonize Christopher Columbus as a saint of the holy Catholic Church, her reason being that he was the first man to raise the cross of Christ in America. St. Columbus would indeed be a new patron for the famous old navigator.

A novel measure of protection against thieves and other crooked customers has been instituted by the Bank of France. An instantaneous photographic operator is placed in such a position that he can, on receiving a signal from the cashier, take a photograph of the person then at the window. A valuable record may be thus preserved of the person to whom a cheque is paid or, whose identity it may be necessary to establish.

A SUBJECT FOR THOUGHT.

It is no simple matter to state in terms at all precise what forces are directly connected with the production of hale and happy old age. More certainly is involved in the process than mere strength of constitution. Healthy surroundings, contentment, and active, temperate and regular habits are most valuable aids. Hard work, so long as it is not carried beyond the limit necessary to permit of the timely repair of worn tissues, is not only harmless but a conducive circumstance. It is, in fact, by living as far as possible a life in accordance with natural law that we may expect to reap the appropriate result in its prolongation. Great care should be taken to protect the system against the changes which disease makes therein; cooling misery casts its shadows before it and intimates its approach by various signs, as a feeling of general weakness, neuralgic pains, nervous headaches and ringing of the ears, failure of vitality and gradual diminution of mental power and similar symptoms, all tend to show that general debility is increasing in the patient's system. Such persons should take notice of the experience of Mrs. C. Whittington, 11 Coventry Place, South Melbourne, who for some years was afflicted with excessive nervous prostration, and who writes:—"I have been suffering over four years with noise in my head, caused by a fright a few days after confinement. During the whole of this time the least excitement would make me very nervous, and it was with great difficulty that I could do my household work, and have scarcely ever had a proper night's rest, being continually disturbed with terrible dreams, and tried many remedies and was under medical treatment, but nothing did any good until a friend recommended Clements' Tonic. I took a large bottle and have much pleasure in testifying to the good it has done me; the noise in my head is removed and I can rest at night now, and am fully convinced that Clements' Tonic does all that is claimed for it, and I recommend it to all I come in contact with, suffering as I have done." Clements' Tonic is sold everywhere. Offices and Laboratories, 215 Abchurch-lane, Melbourne and at Sydney.

How to gain Flesh and Strength.—Take after each meal about a tablespoonful of Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It is almost as palatable as milk and easily digested. The rapidly with which delicate children and sickly people suffering from weakness and wasting disease improve and thrive upon this diet is fully marvelous. As a remedy for Consumption and Throat Affections and Bronchitis it is unequalled by any other medicine in the world. Any Chemist can supply it. A. S. Watson & Co.
